The Merrick Medal Debate.

The University of Georgetown not having completed the improvement of its buildings now in progress, will this year have the debate for the "Merrick Medal" at Lincoln Hall. This will be the sixth debate since the endowment of the prize by R. T. Merrick, esq. Four debaters are required to be selected, according to the terms of the deed, from the Philodemic Society by the members thereof, and three judges are chosen by the president of the university from "prominent and distinguished gentlemen not connected with the university." The prize is regarded by the students as the highest conferred, and is always contested with ability and great earnestness. The question for the present debate is, "Is it expedient, in the commerce of the United States with other nations, that the Federal Government should impose a tariff for revenue only?" and the affirmative has been as- shown through by Mr. Corcoran. They also visited signed to Messrs, D. A. Shannahan, of Virginia, the Patent Office, the Smithsonian, Brady's gallery, and A. C. Wright, of Georgia, and the negative to Where their pictures were taken, and the National Messas, W. A. Lackey, District of Columbia, and J. Museum, and drove over to Arlington Last even.

SILENT SCHOLARS.

COMMENCEMENT AT KENDALL GREEN.

A Notable Gathering at the College-Addresses by President Garfield and ex-Speaker Randall -Degrees Conferred Upon the Dumb Graduates-The Exercises.

Kendall Green wore its spring dress yesterday, and presented a charming picture seated amid the rolling stretches of velvety green lawns, with the background of majestic forest trees just bursting into bloom. The air was laden with the delightful perfume of flowers, and the numerous visitors that came to attend the annual presentation exercises of the National Deaf-Mute College paused before entering the hall to admire the oveliness of her surroundings. As is the custom upon these annual occasions, the audience was a very large and fashionable one, comprising many prominent in efficial and social life. Upon the stage were seated President Garfield, ex-Speaker Randall, Mr. W. W. Corcoran, Hon. W. H. Hunt, Secretary of the Navy; Hon Josiah Dent, Commissioner of the District: General Dunn, ex-Judge Advocate United States army; Professor Simon Newcomb, General Eaton, the Commissioners of Education, Mr. Peter Parker, Mr. J. C. McGuire, Judge Niblack, of Indiana; Rev. F. D. Power, pastor of the Christian Church; J. Stanley Brown, private secretary to the President; Judge Drake, Chief-Justice of the Court of Claims; Rev. Thomas Gallandet, D. D., of New York, and the members of the faculty. The members of

THE GRADUATING CLASS. and students of the college occupied seats in front of the platform. The exercises were begun with prayer by Rev. Mr. Power. President Gallaudet. in announcing the first speaker, Jeremiah P. Kelly, of Minnesota, whose subject was "Our Country's Progress," stated that owing to indisposition he was unable to speak. He then introduced the next speaker, Mr. Frank W. Shaw, of Ohio, whose subject was "John Wycliffe.' Mr. Shaw is a young man of medium height, dressed in a stylish cut-away coat, and as Professor Chickering read his essay, he delivered it in the sign language. The essay was in the nature of a biographical sketch, and the silent orator threw considerable expression and force into the delivery. At the close he was warmly applauded, and received several bouquets. "Civil-Service Reform in England" was the subject of an oration by Richard Long, of Ohio, who excused the choice of a subject by stating that, as

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM was needed in this country, the experience of other countries would be of value. At times the reader of the essay would get in advance of the gesticulating speaker, and would pause, in order to allow him to catch up. In the dead silence that ensued the spectacle of this young man, violently and earnestly making gestures, was rather odd. Mr. Theodore A. Kieslel, of Delaware, spoke of "The Earth, as Transformed by Man." He was a young man of about twenty, and showed such facility with the sign language that he not only kept up with the reader, but seemed by his manner to want | afternoon. to convey to the audience the ideas which he was expressing. During the intermission president Gallaudet gave a very interesting exhibition of the method employed in

TEACHING THE DEAF-MUTES to talk. Upon a blackboard were written a number of characters representing the letters of the alphabet and also some words. Three pupils-one a harm done was the scaring of a sick lady in the girl of about thirteen, another of eleven years, and a boy apparently about nine-were brought blackboard they articulated them so distinctly that the persons on the platform were in many instances able to distinguish them. Of course the sounds made were similar to those uttered by ail deaf persons that have the power of speech-harsh and irregular-but they showed what training could accomplish. An illustration of reading from the lips was given by two young boys who were born deaf. One repeated the numerals, and the other, by watching the movements of his lips, was able to repeat them after Then a boy who had been dumb from childhood, but had his hearing partially, recited a poem entitled "The Mill." The audience were able to distinguish most of the words uttered. but the tone was of course harsh and without modulation. This exhibition was very interesting and warmly applauded. The next oration was on "Scientific Association," by Isaac N. Hammer, of Tennessee. He had a partial hearing from boyhood, and had under many difficulties retained his speech. He delivered the oration in a loud, strong voice, and the only thing noticeable was a clipping of some words in pronunciation. "Money-Its Use and Abuse," was the subject of the last oration, by Albert H. Schory, of Ohio. Secretary Kirkwood was announced to deliver the address to the graduating class, but President Gallaudet stated that he had pressure of business at the Department. was asked to make some remarks, and responded in his usual felicitous manner. President Gallaudet then presented the following candidates for the degrees mentioned: For the degree of bachelor of arts-Albert Henry Schory, Isaac Newton Hammer, Richard L'Hommedien Long, Jeremiah P. Kelley: for the degree of bachelor of philosophy-Frank Wiley Shaw, Theodore Adams Kiesel. He then thanked the President for his presence, and referred to the interest which he had taken during his public life in the institution. in reply, said that in presenting these young men it was a presentation to the world of minds that had been awakened to new powers. Therein lies the beneficence of this education. It has been said that he is a benefactor of his race who makes his blades of grass grow where one has grown before. The men who can multiply the powers of a boy's mind are vastly more benefitetors of the world. The old common law did not consider these unfortunates responsible either legally or morally. This species of education creates them into broad, wide citizens. He said that he had always looked upon this place as the neutral ground in politics, where all might unite. independent of politics. He was glad to note the progress that had been made, and that it was not irupeded by any change at the Capital. He hoped that this would always be the ease. The President's remarks were heartily applauded. The fol-

ANSWER TO "HORATIUS,"

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN: I have just found out through the kindness of a friend that I was sat down upon, crushed, annihilated, and exterminated by a person who signs the appalling name of "Horatius" in the Gazette of last Sunday. It would be bad enough to be sat down upon by Thomas, or John, or Henry: but O ye gods. "Horatius!" The very name crushes. ensation one experiences in finding that one has been sat down upon. It is a kind of a lop-sided feeling; a sensation of having been fiattened like

"Horatius" seems to have pondered and ruminated upon the matter until hardt's shortcomings with too much toleration. He insists that I should be more dignified and lit eral in the treatment of such grave matters as those discussed in the Bernhardt article. "Horatius objects to my using the word "irregularities" in regard to Sara; but I insist that Sara has been guilty of "irregularities." If "Horatius" thinks some other term would describe Bernhardt's shortcomings better, he is at liberty to use it; but the fact remains that her habits have been considerably removed from what is understood as "regular. "Horatius" objects also to my saying, in regard SARA'S "PETITE ACCIDENT." that it is convenient as well as respectable to have a father who has no objections to acknowledging that he is your father. I shall insist that I am correct, also, in having made this statement. I made it with due deliberation, and am ready to stand by it. "Horatius" can say as much more in favor of "regular" fathers as he chooses. I could have that some man might be found brave enough to acknowledge it as his at every step. I can only state in reply that I do not happen to be so fortunate as TO KNOW OF SUCH A MAN. but would be exceedingly happy to know of one and even more happy to know of more.
